SHORT STORIES FOR EVENING HOURS

COUNTING THE COST.

Ventlin's girl told the young man that she didn't think it would do any good to talk to her father.

"He likes you, but he thinks you are too headstrong," said Miss Grace. "That's what he told mamma. He said you were irresponsible and imprudent."

"He must be crazy," said Ventling. "I'm responsible! I like that! What do you suppose put that idea into his head?"

"Of course he doesn't know you and he gets notions," said the girl. "He said it was just like you to want to rush into matrimony headlong and blindfold. He said he supposed you thought two persons with healthy appetites could live on love and moonshine."

"I see," said the young man. "He has an idea that I am not practical and that I haven't given the subject the serious consideration it demands."

"Something like that," said the girl.

Ventlin's face took on a look of determination. "We'll just fool him, then," he said. "Sweetheart, I wonder if you haven't got about a ream of paper and a few lead pencils. I want to do some figuring."

That was how it came that when Pogrum said, "I suppose you have considered this matter from every point of view, Ventling?" the young man answered promptly. "Certainly, sir. I never decide upon any matter, however unimportant it may seem to others, without due reflection. I make sure I'm right and then go ahead—Or turn back, as the case may be."

"You think you can afford to marry, then?" asked Pogrum.

"I know I can afford to marry," returned Ventling. "I shouldn't consider myself justified in assuming the duties and responsibilities of married life without knowing exactly where I stood. I have taken nothing for granted."

Grace's father looked rather taken aback, but he recovered sufficiently to ask Ventling to be a little more explicit.

"To begin with, my salary is at present $100 a month," said Ventling. "I am assured that by next June I shall get an increase that will bring it up to $125. Next June is several months off and much may happen before that time. Therefore I figure on a basis of $100. It seems to me the wiser way."

Pogrum crossed his legs and coughed expectantly.

"Being of a practical turn of mind, I naturally considered the cost of living first," resumed Ventling. "I visited the stores in the neighborhood where Grace and I intend to live and—"

"I think you are going just a little too fast," interrupted Pogrum. "I thought you said you took nothing for granted."

"We'll leave that point for the present," said Ventling. "I was going to say that I acquainted myself thoroughly with the prices of groceries, vegetables, meats, milk and so forth. You might glance over this schedule if you care to."

From his breast pocket he produced some sheets of paper neatly typewritten and handed them to Pogrum, who adjusted his spectacles and looked them over.

"Upon these figures I have carefully estimated what it will cost to supply our little household," Ventling went on. "I estimate that we shall expend for groceries, including vegetables, $7.50 a week and for meats, allowing for a sufficient variety and buying bacon by the price, $2 a week. Our lighting and fuel gas bill will cost us $7.50 a month. I have studied meters and have computed pretty accurately. I think the number of burners and the time we shall use them. From the meat bill I might deduct $1.20 a month on account of invitations to dine with you on alternate Sundays, which will save us the cost of a roast. However, each invitation will require 20 cents car fare and 18 cents to make up for the cod meat we should have left over for stew or hash."

"Um!" said Pogrum.

"My lunches downtown will cost me $6 a month," continued the young man. "My car fare $2.40. Will you please check off the items?"

"I now come to house rent. Our flat will cost us $32.50 a month. It is a third flat at 3886 Harrington avenue. Six rooms and a bath, including steam heat. The landlord agrees to let me have it at that figure if I take it within a month. It regularly rents for $35."

"I now come to insurance. Of course I shouldn't think of leaving Grace unprotected for in the event of my death. I should consider it criminal to make no provision of that sort, though I am in good health and expect to continue so. I have apportioned $5 a month for insurance in a good company. I also allow $5 a month for a sick fund. A maid will cost us $20 a month."

"To sum up, our living expenses,

The Best Cough Drops Are Drops of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Sixty years ago physicians first used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and ever since then it has been the standard cough remedy all over the world. Thousands of families, in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, keep a bottle of it in the house ready for an emergency.

controls the spasmodic efforts of coughing, relieves the congestion in the throat, quiets the inflammation in the bronchial tubes, and prevents the lungs from becoming involved. liberally estimated, amount to $88.50, while our income is $100. That leaves a surplus of $11.50. Say we spend the $1.10 for incidentals—in foolishness, if you please—we have still $10.40 a month to put aside for a rainy day."

Ventling leaned back in his chair and smiled at Grace's father with an air of perfect confidence.

Pogrum frowned at the figures. For about five minutes he looked and frowned. Then he said: "There's a trifling error here, Ventling. I see you have reckoned everything on a monthly basis except the grocery and meat bills. You have got the weekly amount of those down. If you add the other three weeks of that you will have a total expense of $122.40, which will leave a monthly deficit of $20.40 in this interesting budget."

Ventling turned pale and taking the paper from Pogrum's hand verified the appalling statement.

"What am I going to do now?" he groaned.

"I suggest that you wait until next June and then come and see me again," said Pogrum, gently. Chicago News.
